Fund manager commentary

In July Brexit seemed to be of little further significance. All the major share indices rose and hit close to the pre-referendum level or, in some cases, a little over. The main, if not the sole driving force remained the continuing incredibly expansive central bank policy, which makes the stock market seem relatively more attractive than the bond market. Investment grade convertible bonds still showed a rise, with the fund increasing in line with its delta. Due to the market trend the delta rose slightly and we also increased our risk a little due to the apparent calming. As of the end of July the fund's position was neutral with a delta around 23%. The valuations for convertible bonds still seem attractive to us.
